Personal summary

Leadership, my outgoing nature, and public speaking, provide me with the skill set to excel at meeting new people and get things done. Kindness and a desire to learn permits me to be an excellent candidate for completing multiple tasks and providing assistance at the same time.

Life skills.

- Leadership.

As a former state council historian, I have gained a plethora of experience in the leadership skill set. Whether it be on the stage in front of large amounts of people giving directions, within the council, or throughout meetings at executive board, I have learned skills that not only help me become a good leader but I have also developed skills that allowed me to better teach others how to become a leader themselves which is what I believe is a true role of a leader.

- Outgoing nature

As a kid just growing up in a big world I used to fear nothing. However as I realised how big the world is I became more self reserved and almost afraid to come out of my shell. However when I joined 4-h and saw those who had overcome the same issue I was facing now I was filled with motivation to go on and try to reach out and become better with not only communicating with those I know but those I don't. As the years in 4-H progressed I slowly became more open until I have reached the point I am now and am able to go out of my way to have conversations with people and make connections.

- Public speaking.

Throughout my previous year in 4-H as the state historian I encountered many challenges but one of the larger challenges I faced was my public speaking skills. On the stage I would get overwhelmed but because of continuous practice as the state council historian, I became able to hold my own on the stage. Altho I cannot currently consider myself a master at the skill, I have developed proficient experience with the skill and would relish the opportunity to gain more experience in this important life skill and help me improve to mastery.
